Chiappa brings the term “serial” to a new level with “LIVESTRONG.” For his third solo with Kate Werble, he’ll cover the downtown Manhattan space with thousands of sculptural fried eggs, some bulging with as many as three Livestrong bracelet-yellow yolks, others lifelessly yolkless. Like an ever-growing amoeba, the coterie of eggs seems to move and multiply across gallery floors and walls, even taking to the streets. The effect is at once humorous and ominous— are they the product of a hyper-productive diner, serving up protein for all, or an unbridled infection induced by our hormone-dependent culture?
